THE PRESENTATION

INSTRUCTIONAL LEVEL: INTERMEDIATE

In her book, Love and Loss in Life and in Treatment, Linda B. Sherby, Ph.D., explores the relationship between her personal life and her work with patients. Interweaving memoir with extensive clinical material, Dr. Sherby demonstrates how inextricably intertwined the lives of both patient and therapist are, with both parties in the treatment room affecting each other on both a conscious and unconscious level. This constant interplay, she maintains, is not only the result of unconscious dynamics, but is also greatly affected by the analyst's current life circumstances.

Love and loss are the threads that bind the book together. In one way or another, all relationships end. People leave, move on, die. Loss is an ever-present part of life. In order to grow and thrive, we must learn to mourn, to move beyond the person we have lost while taking that person with us in our minds. Love, unlike loss, is not inevitable but no satisfying life can be lived without it. Those who wall themselves off from love for fear of the inevitable loss can learn that loss can be borne and the anticipation of loss can even increase the intensity of connection.

It has now been six months since Love and Loss was published, time for the book to generate some reaction from both patients and colleagues. As Dr. Sherby expected, questions about self-disclosure and confidentiality have arisen. In this presentation, Linda Sherby will talk extensively about why she chose to reveal as much personal information as she did, as well as the response of patients and others. She will also address the way she dealt with the thorny problem of patient confidentiality.

THE PRESENTER

Linda B. Sherby, Ph.D., ABPP is a psychologist-psychoanalyst in practice in Boca Raton. She is the present Secretary and past-President of the Southeast Florida Association for Psychoanalytic Psychology and a Faculty Member and Supervising Analyst of the Southeast Florida Institute for Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy. She is the author of the book, Love and Loss in Life and in Treatment.

THE LEARNING OBJECTIVES

After attending this program in full, participants will be able to:

- 1) Understand the conscious and possibly unconscious motivations that go into the writing of a book.
- 2) Describe the complex interplay between patient and therapist and understand how it affects both the process and outcome of treatment.
- 3) Describe how self-disclosure serves to both connect and protect the therapist from his/her patients.
- 4) Describe how self-disclosure can affect the therapeutic relationship both positively and negatively.
